Suggested Questions to Ask Evaluators

- The credentials: Have you tested adults with learning disabilities and/or Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder?
 - Check to make sure the clinician is a licensed mental health professional, or is being supervised by someone who is licensed. Additionally, it is helpful to ask and receive confirmation that they have received training to administer psychological and psycho-educational assessments.
- The process: What is the evaluation process?
 - Ask if the assessment process will include “psycho-educational testing” that includes “measures for cognitive functioning or ability.” It is helpful to use those quoted words exactly. If you are worried you might have a learning disability like dyslexia, then also ask if the assessment process will include measures for “academic achievement or performance.”
- The payment: What is the cost of the evaluation? Can insurance cover the costs? Are there other funding sources? Can a payment program be worked out?
 - Double check that the clinician takes your insurance. Ask the clinician what the best way would be to get a quote for the assessment, or to get an estimate on how much insurance will cover. Some will want you to check with insurance and some will do this themselves, so just ask what they would prefer.

Don't be afraid to ask any other questions you might have. This can be a confusing process, and you deserve to know as much information as you would like before committing to it. Other questions might include:

- How many hours, or sessions, are required?
- Will there be a written report of the evaluation? Will I be able to meet with you to discuss the results?
- Will our discussion give me ideas on how to manage my areas of disability?
- Will the report include recommendations about where to go for immediate help?
- If I have additional questions in the future, are you available for consultation? If so, what is the charge?
